Music has the power to transport us to a place and time in our lives that we have long forgotten. As many caregivers have seen, the same can be true of someone 31 Alzheimer's or dementia. A research team from the Boston University Alzheimer's Disease Center, 32 by Andrew Budson, associate director for research at the center, believes there are two theories to explain the effects of music 33 people with Alzheimer's and other forms of dementia. First, he believes that because music has emotional content it can trigger emotional memories, which he says are "some of the more powerful memories that we have." Another 34 music can be so transformative to people with Alzheimer's, is that when we learn music, we store the knowledge as procedural memory. Procedural memory is associated with routines and repetitive activities. As dementia progresses, episodic memory is destroyed but procedural memory is largely left intact. 35 more research needs to be done to determine the exact relationship between music and memory, lead author of the study, Nicholas Simmons-Stern said he does know that: Every patient could benefit from having more music in their lives.

四、閱讀測驗【請依照段落上下文意，選出最適當的答案】

When you wake up in the morning to the sound of your alarm after a less than satisfactory night's sleep, it can be all too enticing to press the snooze button and stay in bed for a few extra minutes. However, by hitting the snooze button, you are interfering with your body's natural waking mechanisms which set you up for exhaustion during the day.

Experts from Sleep Clinic Services have explained why you should refrain from pushing the snooze button. As most snooze buttons are set to last around 9 minutes, that amount of time isn't enough for you to complete a full sleep cycle. Therefore, your alarm ends up jolting you back to wakefulness while you're still transitioning between sleep stages. As a result, when you finally get out of bed, you experience what scientists call "sleep inertia."

Sleep inertia is the feeling of grogginess that many people have when they get up in the morning. This state usually only lasts for around 15 to 30 minutes as your mind and body gradually become more alert. However, according to research, it can take up to an hour and a half to shake off sleep-inertia grogginess. Besides grogginess, your memory, judgment, and reaction time are all affected. That spells trouble for all those sleepy commuters who get on the road shortly after waking up.

Despite its popularity, snoozing creates a vicious cycle. The more you make a habit out of hitting snooze, the likelier you are to confuse your brain and your internal body clock. You want your brain to learn a conditioned response to your alarm – when the alarm goes off, it's time for your brain to wake you up. However, if you keep snoozing, you prevent this response from ever developing, thus defeating the purpose of the alarm.

To stop snoozing once and for all, Mel Robbins, creator of the 5-Second Rule, shares her formula for meeting a goal, such as getting out of bed. She recommends that you must physically move within five seconds or your brain will kill the idea. For example, your alarm goes off, and you tell yourself to get up. Instead of hitting snooze, you count backward from five and then get up. It sounds simple, but it works.

【2】36. What is the passage mainly about?

一位製造業的企業家曾於一場大學畢業典禮演說時提到，高等教育成功的關鍵在於考量大學畢業生的就業市場需求，以平撫一般大眾的憂慮。然而，事實上可能會顧此失彼：大學教育的排他性過高，可能會導致畢業生最後落得找不到工作；學問追求若過於全面通泛，也可能會造成畢業生失去其利基。因此，大學要在維持本身學術獨立的自由空間之同時，也讓學生能具備專業的一技之長，這點至關重要。

People gathered across Paris in shock and in tears as the Notre Dame cathedral, one of the city's most famous landmarks, caught on fire, sending up giant billows of smoke and flames. The fire broke out in the evening on April 15, and the flames quickly engulfed the cathedral's spire, which was reconstructed in the 19th century, causing it to collapse. Thousands of onlookers watched as the fire glowed red in the spire before the pointed structure splintered and fell over, sending more smoke and flames upward.

The official cause of the blaze is currently unknown, though a spokesperson for firefighters in Paris said the fire began in the cathedral's attic. French President Emmanuel Macron, in a speech to the nation that night, offered thanks to emergency responders who battled the flames and vowed Notre Dame will be rebuilt. He said, "This is our history, and it's burning."
